Narrator: The Big Friendly Giant was seated at the great table in his cave and he was doing his homework. Sophie sat cross-legged on the table-top near by, watching him at work. The BFG, with great care and patience, was printing something on a piece of paper with an enormous pencil.

Sophie: 'What are you writing?' (Sophie asked him.)

BFG: 'Every dream is having its special label on the bottle.' 'How else could I be finding the one I am wanting in a hurry?'

Sophie: 'But can you really and truly tell what sort of a dream it's going to be simply by listening to it?'

BFG: 'I can,'

Narrator: the BFG said, not looking up.

Sophie: 'But how? Is it by the way it hums and buzzes?'

BFG: 'You is less or more right.' 'Every dream in the world is making a different sort of buzzy-hum music. And these grand swashboggling ears of mine is able to read that music.'

Sophie: 'By music, do you mean tunes?'

BFG: 'I is not meaning tunes.'

Sophie: 'Then what do you mean?'

Sophie: 'Right.' 'Lots of music.'

BFG: 'And sometimes human beans is very overcome when they is hearing wonderous music. They is getting shivers down their spindels. Right or left?'

Sophie: 'Right.'

BFG: 'So the music is saying something to them. It is sending a message. I do not think the human beans is knowing what that message is, but they is loving it just the same.'

Sophie: 'That's about right.'

Narrator: (Pause) The End! Thank you for listening. (Music)
